“The problem of the house is a problem of the epoch,” stated Swiss architect Le Corbusier; architecture, he felt, should focus on everyday life and produce housing that is “made for living in.”

This book presents inspiring work from around the world that is bringing nature back into our cities: from urban farming initiatives, guerilla gardening, and architectural visions, to furniture, products, and other everyday objects that use plants in a functional or aesthetic way.

PATTERNS AND STRUCTURE: SELECTED WRITINGS 1973-2008
BY GUY NORDENSON

“It is rare to see engineers engaging in a sustained effort to write about their work and its significance,” says Harvard Professor Antoine Picon. This compilation is a wonderful reflection on Nordenson’s career thus far and the changing pace and stature of structural engineering.
